BookDescriptionRowmanandLittlefieldPublishers.VanDyke,andNoelA. And, you know, we spent the better part of the 20th century, post-World War II, trying to make a system that prevents that, in which, yes, we have great power of competition, but rules and institutions order the way international relations work, not who has the biggest ships. The Chinese accidentally sunk one and got so scared because they zomped[SP] a dozen Vietnamese fishermen in the water and very nearly killed them on global television that they pulled out a month early. It is equally likely that Beijing would recognize this absurdity and not publicly object to such a FON operation.
